

No. 11-1507

In the Supreme Court of the United States

—◆—
TOWNSHIP OF MOUNT HOLLY,
NEW JERSEY, et al.,

Petitioners,

v.

MT. HOLLY GARDENS
CITIZENS IN ACTION, INC., et al.,

Respondents.

—◆—
On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit

—◆—
BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF
PACIFIC LEGAL FOUNDATION,
CENTER FOR EQUAL OPPORTUNITY,
COMPETITIVE ENTERPRISE INSTITUTE,
CATO INSTITUTE, INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS
FOUNDATION, AND REASON FOUNDATION
IN SUPPORT OF NEITHER PARTY

MERIEM L. HUBBARD

RALPH W. KASARDA*

Counsel of Record*

Pacific Legal Foundation

930 G Street

Sacramento, CA 95814

Telephone: (916) 419-7111

Facsimile: (916) 419-7747

E-mail: mlh@pacificlegal.org

E-mail: rwk@pacificlegal.org

ROGER CLEGG

Ctr. for Equal Opportunity

7700 Leesburg Pike Ste. 231

Falls Church, VA 22043

HANS BADER

Competitive Enterprise Inst.

1899 L St NW, Floor 12

Washington, DC 20036

ILYA SHAPIRO

Cato Institute

1000 Mass. Ave. NW

Washington, DC 20001

MANUEL KLAUSNER
Individual Rights Found.
601 W. 5th Street, 8th Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071
Reason Foundation
5737 Mesmer Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90230

Counsel for Amici Curiae
Pacific Legal Foundation, Center for Equal Opportunity,
Competitive Enterprise Institute, Cato Institute,
Individual Rights Foundation, and Reason Foundation

QUESTION PRESENTED

Are disparate impact claims cognizable under the Fair Housing Act?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
QUESTION PRESENTED	i
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iv
IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE	1
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT	4
ARGUMENT	7
I. THE STATUTORY LANGUAGE AND CONGRESSIONAL INTENT OF THE FAIR HOUSING ACT PRECLUDE DISPARATE IMPACT CLAIMS	7
A. The Plain Language of the Fair Housing Act Limits Its Applicability to Disparate Treatment	7
B. Congress Intended the Fair Housing Act to Ban Intentional Discrimination, Not Racially Neutral Laws That Merely Have a Disproportionate Effect	18
II. DISPARATE IMPACT DOCTRINE DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH EQUAL PROTECTION AND FEDERALISM	22
A. Disparate Impact Doctrine Encourages Racial Quotas and Alters the State-Federal Balance	22
B. Extending Disparate Impact Doctrine to the Fair Housing Act Would Lead to Substantially Adverse Results	31

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

	Page
CONCLUSION	35

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page
Cases
Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena , 515 U.S. 200 (1995)	1, 22
Alexander v. Sandoval , 532 U.S. 275 (2001)	1-2, 13
Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon , 473 U.S. 234 (1985)	30
Bartlett v. Strickland , 556 U.S. 1 (2009)	2
BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp. , 511 U.S. 531 (1994)	6, 29
Brock v. Pierce Cnty. , 476 U.S. 253 (1986)	18
City of Richmond v. J.A. Croson Co. , 488 U.S. 469 (1989)	1-2, 22, 26
FCC v. ABC , 347 U.S. 284 (1954)	16
Fischer v. City of St. Louis , 194 U.S. 361 (1904)	29
Fisher v. Univ. of Tex. at Austin , 133 S. Ct. 2411 (2013)	1-2
Florida v. United States Dep't of Health & Human Servs. , 648 F.3d 1235 (11th Cir. 2011)	2
Gratz v. Bollinger , 539 U.S. 244 (2003)	1-2
Griggs v. Duke Power Co. , 401 U.S. 424 (1971)	5, 10-11, 17
Grove City Coll. v. Bell , 465 U.S. 555 (1984)	18
Grutter v. Bollinger , 539 U.S. 306 (2003)	1-2

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., Inc. , 513 U.S. 561 (1995)	15
Hirabayashi v. United States , 320 U.S. 81 (1943)	22
Int’l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States , 431 U.S. 324 (1977)	10
Johnson v. California , 543 U.S. 499 (2005)	1
League of United Latin American Citizens v. Perry , 548 U.S. 399 (2006)	2
Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod v. FCC , 141 F.3d 344 (D.C. Cir. 1998)	26
Magner v. Gallagher, cert. dismissed , 132 S. Ct. 1306 (2012)	28
Mass. Bd. of Ret. v. Murgia , 427 U.S. 307 (1976)	26
Metro. Hous. Dev. Corp. v. Vill. of Arlington Heights , 558 F.2d 1283 (7th Cir. 1977)	12-13
Miller v. Johnson , 515 U.S. 900 (1995)	27
Nw. Austin Mun. Util. Dist. No. 1 v. Holder , 557 U.S. 193 (2009)	2
Parents Involved in Cmty. Schs. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1 , 551 U.S. 701 (2007)	1-2
Pers. Adm’r of Mass. v. Feeney , 442 U.S. 256 (1979)	8, 12-13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Phillips v. Cohen , 400 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2005)	9
Regents of the Univ. of Cal. v. Bakke , 438 U.S. 265 (1978)	2, 24-25
Resident Advisory Bd. v. Rizzo , 564 F.2d 126 (3d Cir. 1977)	12, 18
Ricci v. DeStefano , 557 U.S. 557 (2009)	1-2, 5-6, 23-26
Rice v. Cayetano , 528 U.S. 495 (2000)	2
Shaw v. Reno , 509 U.S. 630 (1993)	2, 22
Shelby Cnty., Ala. v. Holder , 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013)	2
Skilling v. United States , 130 S. Ct. 2896 (2010)	6, 26
Smith v. City of Jackson, Miss. , 544 U.S. 228 (2005)	5, 8-15, 26
St. Mary’s Honor Ctr. v. Hicks , 509 U.S. 502 (1993)	2
Town of Huntington, N.Y. v. Huntington Branch, NAACP , 488 U.S. 15 (1988)	27-28
United States v. Bass , 404 U.S. 336 (1971)	30
United States v. Thompson Arms Co. , 504 U.S. 505 (1992)	16
Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust , 487 U.S. 977 (1988)	6, 9, 11, 23, 25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Watters v. Wachovia Bank, N.A. , 550 U.S. 1 (2007)	2-3
Wygant v. Jackson Bd. of Educ. , 476 U.S. 267 (1986)	2
Federal Statutes
29 U.S.C. § 623	14
§ 623(a)(1)	9-10
§ 623(a)(2)	8-9
42 U.S.C. § 1973c	16
§ 2000d	13
§ 2000e	17
§ 2000e-2	11
§ 2000e-2(a)(2)	5, 10
§ 2000e-2(k)	9
§ 2000e-2(k)(1)(A)	18
§ 3604(a)	7-8, 10-11, 14-15
§ 3604(b)	7
§ 3604(c)	8, 15
§ 3604(d)	7
§ 3604(e)	8
§§ 3604(f)(3)(A) and (B)	16
§ 3605	6-7, 32
§ 3606	8, 15

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
§ 3610	27
§ 3613	27
§ 3617	15
§ 3631	15
Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-430, § 6(b)(2), 102 Stat. 1619 (1988)	17
Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-383, § 808(b)(1), 88 Stat. 633 (1974)	17
Rules of Court
Sup. Ct. R. 37.3(a)	1
37.6	1
Miscellaneous
114 Cong. Rec. 2270 (1968)	19
114 Cong. Rec. 2277 (Feb. 6, 1968)	21
114 Cong. Rec. 2533 (Feb. 7, 1968)	20
114 Cong. Rec. 3129 (Feb. 15, 1968)	21
114 Cong. Rec. 3252 (Feb. 16, 1968)	21
114 Cong. Rec. 3421 (Feb. 20, 1968)	22
114 Cong. Rec. 4974 (Mar. 4, 1968)	5, 19
114 Cong. Rec. 5643 (Mar. 7, 1968)	20
114 Cong. Rec. 9564 (Apr. 10, 1968)	21

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Bader, Hans, Justice Department’s Witch Hunt Against Banks Will Harm Economy, Competitive Enterprise Institute (July 11, 2011)	33
Biskupic, Joan, Analysis: Rights Groups Try to Avoid US High Court Setback, Reuters, (Mar. 2, 2012), available at http://www.reuters.com/article/2012/03/02/us-usa-court-civil-rights-idUSTRE82117X20120302 (last visited Aug. 27, 2013)	28
Clegg, Roger, Disparate Impact in the Private Sector: A Theory Going Haywire, Briefly, Perspectives on Legislation, Regulation, and Litigation, Vol. 5, No. 12 (Dec. 2001), available at http://www.aei.org/files/2001/12/01/Briefly-Disparate-Impact.pdf (last visited Aug. 27, 2013)	28, 31, 33
Clegg, Roger, Home Improvement: The Court Should Kill an Unfair Housing Strategy With No Basis in Law, Legal Times, Vol. 25, Issue 39 (Oct. 7, 2002), available at http://judiciary.house.gov/hearings/pdf/Clegg100429.pdf (Appendix) (last visited on Aug. 27, 2013)	31
Editorial, Squeezed in St. Paul, Wall St. J., Feb. 12, 2012, available at http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052970203824904577215514125903018.html (last visited Aug. 27, 2013)	28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

	Page
Hannah-Jones, Nikole, How the Supreme Court Could Scuttle Critical Fair Housing Rule , ProPublica (Feb. 8, 2013)	28
Hendershott, Patric H. & Villani, Kevin, The Subprime Lending Debacle: Competitive Private Markets Are the Solution, Not the Problem , Policy Analysis No. 679, Cato Institute (June 20, 2011)	33
Implementation of the Fair Housing Act’s Discriminatory Effects Standard, 78 Fed. Reg. 11460 (Feb. 15, 2013)	14
Marcus, Kenneth L., The War Between Disparate Impact and Equal Protection , 2008-2009 Cato Sup. Ct. Rev. 64 (2009)	25
Remarks on Signing the Fair Housing Act Amendment Act of 1988, 24 Weekly Comp. Pres. Doc. 1140-41 (Sept. 13, 1988)	17
Scanlan, James P., “Disparate Impact”: Regulators Need a Lesson in Statistics , American Banker (June 5, 2012)	34
Scanlan, James P., The Lending Industry’s Conundrum , National Law Journal (Apr. 2, 2012)	34
Scanlan, James P., Misunderstanding of Statistics Leads to Misguided Law Enforcement Policies , Amstat News (Dec. 1, 2012), available at http://magazine.amstat.org/blog/2012/12/01/misguided-law-enforcement/ (last visited Aug. 27, 2013)	33

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Testimony of Roger Clegg Before the House Judiciary Committee’s Subcommittee on the Constitution, Civil Rights, and Civil Liberties (Apr. 29, 2010), available at http://judiciary.house.gov/hearings/pdf/Clegg100429.pdf
(last visited on Aug. 27, 2013) 32

IDENTITY AND INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Pacific Legal Foundation (PLF), Center for Equal Opportunity (CEO), Competitive Enterprise Institute (CEI), Cato Institute, Individual Rights Foundation (IRF), and Reason Foundation respectfully submit this brief amicus curiae in support of neither party.¹

PLF is a nonprofit, tax-exempt corporation organized under the laws of the State of California for the purpose of engaging in litigation in matters affecting the public interest. PLF has participated as amicus curiae in this Court in numerous cases relevant to this case. PLF has addressed unjustified applications of disparate impact theory in Ricci v. DeStefano, 557 U.S. 557 (2009), and Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275 (2001). PLF has also participated as amicus curiae in nearly every major racial discrimination case heard by this Court in the past three decades, including Fisher v. Univ. of Tex. at Austin, 133 S. Ct. 2411 (2013); Parents Involved in Cmty. Schs. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1, 551 U.S. 701 (2007); Johnson v. California, 543 U.S. 499 (2005); Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244 (2003); Grutter v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 306 (2003); Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1995); City of Richmond v.

¹ Pursuant to this Court's Rule 37.3(a), all parties have consented to the filing of this brief. Letters evidencing such consent have been filed with the Clerk of the Court.

Pursuant to Rule 37.6, Amici Curiae affirm that no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No persons other than Amici Curiae, their members, or their counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission.

J.A. Croson Co., 488 U.S. 469 (1989); Wygant v. Jackson Bd. of Educ., 476 U.S. 267 (1986); and Regents of the Univ. of Cal. v. Bakke, 438 U.S. 265 (1978).

CEO is a nonprofit research and educational organization devoted to issues of race and ethnicity, such as civil rights, bilingual education, and immigration and assimilation. CEO supports color blind public policies and seeks to block the expansion of racial preferences and to prevent their use in, for instance, employment, education, and voting. CEO has participated as amicus curiae in numerous cases concerning equal protection, such as Shelby Cnty., Ala. v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013); Fisher v. Univ. of Tex. at Austin, 133 S. Ct. 2411 (2013); Ricci v. DeStefano, 557 U.S. 557 (2009), Nw. Austin Mun. Util. Dist. No. 1 v. Holder, 557 U.S. 193 (2009); Bartlett v. Strickland, 556 U.S. 1 (2009); Parents Involved in Cmty. Schs. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1, 551 U.S. 701 (2007); League of United Latin American Citizens v. Perry, 548 U.S. 399 (2006); Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244 (2003); Grutter v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 306 (2003); Alexander v. Sandoval, 532 U.S. 275 (2001); Rice v. Cayetano, 528 U.S. 495 (2000); Shaw v. Reno, 509 U.S. 630 (1993); and St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502 (1993).

CEI is a nonprofit public interest organization dedicated to individual liberty and limited government. To that end, CEI has participated as amicus, or counsel for amici, in past cases raising federalism or civil-rights issues. See, e.g., Florida v. United States Dep't of Health & Human Servs., 648 F.3d 1235 (11th Cir. 2011) (amicus brief for state legislators); Parents Involved in Cmty. Schs. v. Seattle Sch. Dist. No. 1, 551 U.S. 701 (2007); and Watters v. Wachovia Bank, N.A., 550 U.S. 1 (2007) (representing banking experts in preemption case).

The Cato Institute is a nonpartisan public policy research foundation dedicated to advancing the principles of individual liberty, free markets, and limited government. Cato's Center for Constitutional Studies was established in 1989 to help restore the principles of limited constitutional government that are the foundation of liberty. Toward those ends, Cato publishes books and studies, conducts conferences, publishes the annual Cato Supreme Court Review, and files amicus briefs.

The IRF was founded in 1993 and is the legal arm of the David Horowitz Freedom Center. The IRF is dedicated to supporting free speech, associational rights, and other constitutional protections. To further these goals, IRF attorneys participate in litigation and file amicus curiae briefs in cases involving fundamental constitutional issues. The IRF opposes attempts from anywhere along the political spectrum to undermine freedom of speech and equality of rights, and it combats overreaching governmental activity that impairs individual rights.

Reason Foundation is a national, nonpartisan, and nonprofit public policy think tank, founded in 1978. Reason's mission is to advance a free society by developing, applying, and promoting libertarian principles and policies—including free markets, individual liberty, and the rule of law. Reason supports dynamic market-based public policies that allow and encourage individuals and voluntary institutions to flourish. Reason advances its mission by publishing Reason magazine, as well as commentary on its websites, www.reason.com and www.reason.tv, and by issuing policy research reports. To further Reason’s commitment to “Free Minds and Free Markets,” Reason selectively participates as amicus curiae in cases raising significant constitutional issues.

This case raises important issues of constitutional law, public policy, and statutory interpretation regarding whether “disparate impact” claims are cognizable under the Fair Housing Act—Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968. Amici argue that the statutory language and congressional intent of the Fair Housing Act preclude disparate impact claims. Amici believe that their public policy perspectives and litigation experience provide an additional viewpoint on the issues presented in this case, which will be of assistance to the Court in its deliberations.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

This case presents the question whether the Federal Fair Housing Act’s ban on racial discrimination can be violated by someone who does not engage in racial discrimination. The federal court of appeals below allowed a “disparate impact” claim to proceed under the Act against the Township of Mount Holly. For such a claim, the plaintiffs need not allege, nor prove, that individuals were treated differently because of their race. Instead, plaintiffs may merely show that a neutral practice has a disproportionate effect—that is, a disparate impact—on some racial group.

The statutory text and the legislative history of the Fair Housing Act, as expressed by its proponents in Congress, establish that the Act was intended to apply solely to disparate treatment, not to acts having a disparate impact on protected classes. The Court has never interpreted the Fair Housing Act as permitting the disparate impact doctrine. In Smith v. City of Jackson, Miss., 544 U.S. 228 (2005), this Court interpreted the statutory text of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) as permitting disparate impact claims. In doing so, however, the Court clearly identified statutory phrasing in two sections of the ADEA that both permit and prohibit claims without proving discriminatory intent. Smith, 544 U.S. at 236 n.6. Language that permits claims without discriminatory intent is also found in 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(2) (Title VII), which this Court interpreted as allowing claims based on disparate impact. Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424, 432 (1971). Such language is absent in the Fair Housing Act. The relevant language of the Act prohibiting discrimination is textually similar to the specific section in the ADEA that requires proof of disparate treatment, not the language in a different section of the ADEA and in Title VII that permits disparate impact claims.

Other parts of the Fair Housing Act's text make clear that no disparate impact causes of action are permitted. Consistent with the statutory text, the legislative history of the Fair Housing Act reveals that the intent of the Act was to prohibit intentional refusals to sell or rent housing because of the race of the renter or buyer. 114 Cong. Rec. 4974 (Mar. 4, 1968).

Subjecting government defendants to disparate impact claims leads them to engage in unconstitutional race-conscious decisionmaking to avoid liability for such claims. This Court's decision in Ricci, 557 U.S.

557, highlights the conflict between disparate impact doctrine and the constitutional guarantees of equal protection. Even before Ricci, this Court noted that “[p]referential treatment and the use of quotas by public employers subject to Title VII can violate the Constitution.” Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 993 (1988).

Interpreting the Fair Housing Act to allow claims without discriminatory intent, even though Congress has not clearly expressed its intention to do so, would violate the canon of constitutional avoidance. Skilling v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 2896, 2940 (2010) (citations omitted). When the constitutionality of a statute is challenged, if the statute is reasonably susceptible to two interpretations, the court must adopt the one construction which will save the statute from constitutional infirmity. Id., 130 S. Ct. at 2940 (citations omitted). Likewise, federal statutes cannot be construed to impinge upon important state interests without regard to the implications of our dual system of government. Before Congress may radically readjust the balance of state and national authority, it must be explicit as to its intent. BFP v. Resolution Trust Corp., 511 U.S. 531, 544 (1994) (citations omitted). No such intent can be found in either the text or legislative history of the Fair Housing Act.

Allowing disparate impact claims to proceed under the Fair Housing Act would lead to adverse results that Congress never intended. For instance, because 42 U.S.C. § 3605 applies to financial institutions, banks and mortgage companies would be pressured to provide loans to unqualified applicants in order to avoid disparate impact liability. Similar actions played a key role in triggering the mortgage crisis of 2007-2008. For these reasons, this Court should find that disparate impact claims are not cognizable under the Fair Housing Act.

ARGUMENT

I

THE STATUTORY LANGUAGE AND CONGRESSIONAL INTENT OF THE FAIR HOUSING ACT PRECLUDE DISPARATE IMPACT CLAIMS

A. The Plain Language of the Fair Housing Act Limits Its Applicability to Disparate Treatment

The Fair Housing Act prohibits discrimination in the sale, rental, and financing of dwellings, and in other housing-related transactions, because of race. The principal operative provision of the Fair Housing Act makes it unlawful (t)o refuse to sell or rent after the making of a bona fide offer, or to refuse to negotiate for the sale or rental of, or otherwise make unavailable or deny, a dwelling to any person because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

42 U.S.C. § 3604(a).²

² Three other prohibitions set forth in the Fair Housing Act also pertain to actions taken “because of” race. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(b) (terms or conditions of sale or rental), 42 U.S.C. § 3604(d) (representation of unavailability of property for sale or rental), and 42 U.S.C. § 3605 (denial of financial assistance). One section, pertaining to real estate advertising, bars any indication of “preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race,”

(continued...)

Although proscribing a broad range of conduct, Congress limited Section 3604(a)'s proscription to action taken "because of" race. The words "because of" plainly connote a purposeful, causal connection between the housing-related action and the person's race or color. The proscribed action must have been caused, at least in part, by the individual's race, which strongly suggests a requirement of discriminatory motivation. In Pers. Adm'r of Mass. v. Feeney, this Court noted that "discriminatory purpose" implies that the decisionmaker selected a particular course of action at least "because of," not merely "in spite of," its adverse effects upon an identifiable group. 442 U.S. 256, 279 (1979).

In Smith, 544 U.S. 228, the Court held that disparate impact claims were cognizable under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA). But in doing so, the Court clearly identified statutory language that would support such claims, and language that would not. The phrasing that this Court interprets as allowing disparate impact claims can be found in 29 U.S.C. § 623(a)(2) (Section 4(a)(2) of the ADEA). According to that section, it shall be unlawful for an employer to limit, segregate, or classify his employees in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment

² (...continued)

(42 U.S.C. § 3604(c)), and another, relating to participation in multiple listing services, prohibits discrimination "on account of" race (42 U.S.C. § 3606). A final section makes it illegal to attempt to induce any person to sell or rent "by representations regarding the entry or prospective entry into the neighborhood of a person or persons of a particular race" (42 U.S.C. § 3604(e)).

opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's age.

Id. (emphasis added). This language creates “an incongruity” between an employer’s actions that are focused on his employees generally, and the individual employee who is impacted “because of those actions.” Smith, 544 U.S. at 236 n.6. Thus, even an employer who classifies his employees without age considerations may be liable under this language if such classification adversely affects the employee because of that employee’s age. Id. This is the “very definition of disparate impact.” Id.; see Watson, 487 U.S. at 991 (citation omitted) (explaining that in disparate impact cases, “the employer’s practices may be said to ‘adversely affect [an individual’s] status as an employee’”).³ Text that focuses on the effects of the action on the employee rather than the motivation for the action of the employer encompasses disparate impact claims. See Smith, 544 U.S. at 235-36 (the terms “otherwise adversely affect” focuses on the effects of the decisionmaker’s action rather than the motivation for the action). The Fair Housing Act does not contain this “otherwise adversely affect” language.

On the other end of the spectrum, 29 U.S.C. § 623(a)(1) (Section 4(a)(1) of the ADEA) provides an example of statutory text identified by this Court that does not allow disparate impact claims. Smith, 544 U.S. at 236 n.6. That section makes it unlawful for an employer to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's age.

³ A separate portion of the holding in Watson was superseded by the 1991 amendments to the Civil Rights Act, but the holding and reasoning remain good law. See Phillips v. Cohen, 400 F.3d 388, 397-98 (6th Cir. 2005); 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k) (2008).

Id. The focus of 29 U.S.C. § 623(a)(1) is on “an employer’s actions with respect to the targeted individual.” Smith, 544 U.S. at 236 n.6. A claim brought pursuant to this section requires proof of discriminatory intent. See Int’l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 335-36 n.15 (1977) (“ ‘Disparate treatment’ . . . is the most easily understood type of discrimination. The employer simply treats some people less favorably than others because of their [protected characteristic]. Proof of discriminatory motive is critical.”) (emphasis added).

The Fair Housing Act’s “because of” language is textually similar to the language of Section 4(a)(1) of the ADEA, which this Court has identified as prohibiting disparate impact claims. Both 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a) and the comparable language of Section 4(a)(1) prohibit a course of action taken “because of,” not merely “in spite of,” its adverse effects upon a identifiable group. The focus of both sections “is on the employer’s actions with respect to the targeted individual.” Smith, 544 U.S. at 236 n.6.

This Court’s interpretation of similar or related language in Title VII further establishes that the Fair Housing Act’s “because of” phrasing, combined with the omission of the “adversely affect” language precludes disparate impact claims. In Griggs, 401 U.S. 424, this Court construed the language in 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(2) (Title VII), which contains the “adversely affect” language, as prohibiting employment practices that had discriminatory effects. See Griggs, 401 U.S. at 431 (Title VII prohibits practices that are “fair in form, but discriminatory in operation.”). Although this Court’s holding in Griggs relied primarily on the purposes of Title VII, this Court subsequently noted that its holding represented the better reading of the statutory text as well. Smith, 544 U.S. at 235 (citing Watson, 487 U.S. at 991).

The text of Title VII examined in Griggs is practically identical to Section 4(a)(2) of the ADEA which allows disparate impact claims, and different than Section 4(a)(1), which does not. Smith, 544 U.S. at 236. In Griggs, this Court identified the following language from Title VII, which it interpreted as allowing disparate impact claims:

Sec. 703. (a) It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—

....

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual’s race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

Griggs, 401 U.S. at 426 n.1 (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2) (emphasis added). Thus both Title VII and the ADEA contain provisions which prohibit an employer’s actions that “adversely affect” an individual’s status because of his or her race. Section 3604(a) of the Fair Housing Act does not contain similar text.

An action taken because of some factor other than race—for example, a zoning decision, even if it causes an indirect discriminatory effect—does not constitute intentional discrimination as outlawed by the Fair Housing Act. The courts of appeals have not presented a plausible alternative reading of the statutory language and, in any event, their reasoning is weakened by Smith's identification of statutory language that allows, or prohibits, disparate impact claims. In Resident Advisory Bd. v. Rizzo, 564 F.2d 126, 146 (3d Cir. 1977), for example, the court acknowledged that the “because of race” language “might seem to suggest that a plaintiff must show some measure of discriminatory intent,” but rejected this logical consequence in part because such a requirement would burden Fair Housing Act plaintiffs. Id. at 146-47. Similarly, in Metro. Hous. Dev. Corp. v. Vill. of Arlington Heights, 558 F.2d 1283, 1288 (7th Cir. 1977), the court noted that “(t)he major obstacle to concluding that action taken without discriminatory intent can violate section 3604(a) [of the Fair Housing Act] is the phrase ‘because of race.’” The court, however, proceeded to embrace “(t)he broad view . . . that a party commits an act ‘because of race’ whenever the natural and foreseeable consequence of that act is to discriminate between races, regardless of his intent.” Id. This reasoning is directly at odds with Feeney, 442 U.S. 256, where this Court, in defining “discriminatory purpose,” stated that the phrase implies more than intent as volition or intent as awareness of consequences It implies that the decisionmaker . . . selected or reaffirmed a particular course of action at least in part “because of,” not merely “in spite of,” its adverse effects upon an identifiable group.

Id. at 279 (citation and footnotes omitted). The reasoning of Arlington Heights is also squarely contradicted by this Court’s holding in Smith, which clarifies that the language of Title VII and the ADEA authorizing disparate impact claims is found in sections that prohibit actions that “deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual’s” race or age. Smith, 544 U.S. at 235. The Fair Housing Act, on the other hand, has no language prohibiting actions that “adversely affect an individual’s status” because of race.

This Court has found that another important civil rights statute, Title VI of the Civil Rights Act, forbids only intentional discrimination and does not prohibit actions taken with a nondiscriminatory motive. Title VI states:

No person in the United States shall, on the ground of race, color, or national origin, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance.

42 U.S.C.A. § 2000d (emphasis added). This language allows a cause of action premised on intentional discrimination but does not permit a cause of action premised on disparate impact. See Alexander, 532 U.S. at 280-81 (“Title VI itself directly reaches only instances of intentional discrimination”). In contrast to Title VII and the ADEA, and similar to the language of the Fair Housing Act, the text of Title VI does not proscribe activities that would “adversely affect” an individual because of a protected characteristic. The phrase, “on the ground of” from Title VI is interchangeable with the “because of” language of the Fair Housing Act. See 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a) (making it unlawful to “make unavailable or deny, a dwelling to any person [on the ground of] race, color, religion, sex, familial status, or national origin”).

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) is statutorily charged with the authority and responsibility for enforcing the Fair Housing Act. HUD argues that Section 3604(a) of the Act allows claims for disparate impact through the phrase, “otherwise make unavailable or deny.” Implementation of the Fair Housing Act’s Discriminatory Effects Standard, 78 Fed. Reg. 11460, 11465-66 (Feb. 15, 2013). This argument cannot be reconciled with Smith.

Section 804(a) of the Fair Housing Act makes it unlawful “[t]o refuse to sell or rent . . . or otherwise make unavailable or deny, a dwelling to any person because of race” 42 U.S.C. § 3604(a) (emphasis added). HUD claims this language should be interpreted as allowing disparate impact because it focuses on the effects of a challenged action rather than the motivation of the actor. 78 Fed. Reg. at 11466. HUD fails to mention that Section 4(a)(1) of the ADEA contains almost identical language. See 29 U.S.C. § 623 (“[i]t shall be unlawful for an employer . . . to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual . . . because of such individual’s age.”). And Smith held Section 4(a)(1) only allowed claims for disparate treatment, not disparate impact. See Smith, 544 U.S. at 236 n.6 (Section 4(a)(1) “does not encompass disparate-impact liability”).

If HUD’s argument were correct, the “otherwise discriminate against” phrase in Section 4(a)(1) would have transformed that provision into one that focuses on the effects of a challenged action rather than the motivation of the actor. But in Smith, this Court held that was not the case. Thus, the “otherwise make unavailable” term in Section 3604(a) of the Fair Housing Act cannot be interpreted as allowing disparate impact claims without contradicting Smith.

There are other ways in which a disparate impact approach is inconsistent with the FHA’s text. The statute’s text uses not only the phrase “because of” race but also “on account of” (Section 3606) and “based on” (Section 3604(c)). It is difficult to see how all of these phrases can be read to include a disparate impact cause of action. All of them are naturally read to require a showing of disparate treatment. The phrase “on account of” appears not only in Section 3606, but also in Section 3617. HUD would, presumably, insist that in the former the phrase allows disparate impact causes of action. But it is quite implausible for it to be interpreted that way in the latter section, which bans coercion and intimidation of those exercising fair-housing rights. Reading language one way in one section and another way in another section is disfavored. See Gustafson v. Alloyd Co., Inc., 513 U.S. 561, 570 (1995) (identical words used in different parts of the same act are intended to have the same meaning). Likewise, the law includes Section 3631, which uses the same “because of” language to delineate certain fair-housing violations as crimes. Criminal prosecutions cannot be based on a disparate impact theory. See, e.g., United States v. Thompson Arms Co., 504 U.S. 505, 517-18 (1992) (applying rule of lenity to resolve ambiguous criminal statute in defendant’s favor); FCC v. ABC, 347 U.S. 284, 296 (1954) (“If we should give [the Act] the broad construction . . . [that] would otherwise apply in criminal cases . . . it would do violence to the well-established principle that penal statutes are to be construed strictly.”). Construction of the Act that interprets a phrase one way in one section and in another way elsewhere is implausible.

The disparate impact approach would render superfluous many of the provisions in the statute regarding the handicapped. For instance, the failure to make or allow “reasonable modifications” and “reasonable accommodations” as required by Section 3604(f)(3)(A) and (B), respectively, could have been attacked under a disparate impact theory without those provisions. More broadly, and particularly in the redevelopment context, an effects approach will require judges and juries to conduct a “balancing” test of discriminatory effect versus myriad, hard-to-quantify interests of the city.

If it had wished to create an effects standard for the Fair Housing Act, Congress is well aware of how to do so. In Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, 42 U.S.C. § 1973c, which predates the Fair Housing Act, Congress mandated that covered jurisdictions seek preclearance of any voting change and demonstrate that it “does not have the purpose and will not have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color.” (emphasis added). This language shows that Congress was aware that race-neutral practices could produce racial effects and that it knew how to prohibit such practices when it intended to do so. It did not do so here.

Congress amended the Fair Housing Act in 1974 and in 1988, but none of the amendments authorize disparate impact claims. See Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988, Pub. L. No. 100-430, § 6(b)(2), 102 Stat. 1619, 1622 (1988) (amending the Act to include “familial status” as a protected class); Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-383, § 808(b)(1), 88 Stat. 633, 729 (1974) (adding “sex” to list of protected classes). When President Reagan signed the 1988 amendments, he declared that the statute “speaks only to intentional discrimination.” Remarks on Signing the Fair Housing Act Amendment Act of 1988, 24 Weekly Comp. Pres. Doc. 1140-41 (Sept. 13, 1988).

In contrast, when Congress amended Title VII in the Civil Rights Act of 1991, it affirmed the holding in Griggs by specifically making allowances for “disparate impact” claims in the statute. Pub. L. No. 102-166, 105 Stat. 1071 (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C. § 2000e (2006)). As amended, the statute provides:

An unlawful employment practice based on disparate impact is established under this title only if—

(i) a complaining party demonstrates that a respondent uses a particular employment practice that causes a disparate impact on the basis of race . . . and the respondent fails to demonstrate that the challenged practice is job related for the position in question and consistent with business necessity; or

(ii) the complaining party . . . [identifies an adequate] alternative employment practice and the respondent refuses to adopt such an alternative employment practice.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k)(1)(A) (2006). Congress took no similar action regarding the Fair Housing Act.

The unambiguous text of the Fair Housing Act focuses on whether people of different races are treated differently because of their race or other stated grounds. This language plainly prohibits only intentional discrimination.

B. Congress Intended the Fair Housing Act to Ban
Intentional Discrimination, Not Racially Neutral Laws That Merely
Have a Disproportionate Effect

The legislative history of the Fair Housing Act reveals that Congress intended the Act to apply only to purposeful discrimination. Because the Fair Housing Act was offered as a floor amendment in the Senate there are no committee reports. Rizzo, 564 F.2d at 147 n.29. The legislative history thus consists of statements by individual legislators on the floor of the Senate and House that may provide evidence of congressional intent. Brock v. Pierce Cnty., 476 U.S. 253, 263 (1986) (citing Grove City Coll. v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555, 567 (1984)). Statements in regard to the Fair Housing Act show that it was not intended to encompass claims without proof of discriminatory motive. Instead, the legislative history shows that Congress was concerned with prohibiting intentional refusals to sell or rent housing because of the race, and intended that financial ability should remain the single most important factor in such transactions.

The original purpose of the Fair Housing Act, as proposed by Senator Mondale, a leading sponsor of the Act, was to enforce “the policy of the United States to prevent discrimination on account of race, color, religion, or national origin in the purchase, rental, financing, and occupancy of housing throughout the United States.” 114 Cong. Rec. 2270 (1968). The following exchange on the floor of the Senate is informative:

SENATOR MONDALE: The bill simply reaches the point where there is an offering to the public and the prospective seller refused to sell to someone solely on the basis of race.

SENATOR MAGNUSON: And he [the prospective buyer] would have to prove discrimination.

SENATOR MONDALE: Yes; and the burden is on the complainant.

114 Cong. Rec. 4974 (Mar. 4, 1968). Clearly, neither Senator believed the Act would encompass a disparate impact claim with its burden shifting approach.

Senator Hart’s statement is consistent with this assessment: “When you go to a property that is publicly offered, let us not run the litmus test of how I spell my name, or where I went to church . . . or what color God gave me.” Id. at 4976. Senator Joseph Tydings confirmed that “what the law would do is make it possible for all citizens to buy decent houses without discrimination against them because of the color of their skin.” Id. at 2533 (Feb. 7, 1968). Senator Mondale stressed the limits on the bill’s authority:

The bill permits an owner to do everything that he could do anyhow with his property—insist upon the highest price, give it to his brother or wife, sell it to his best friend, do everything he could ever do with property, except refuse to sell it to a person solely on the basis of his color or his religion.

Id. at 5643 (Mar. 7, 1968). Senator Mondale further proclaimed: “That is all it does. It does not confer any right. It simply removes the opportunity to insult and discriminate against a fellow American because of his color, and that is all.” Id. Congressman Steiger declared: “You cannot, because of one reason—race—refuse to sell or rent property. All of the legitimate criteria which a homeowner uses to judge the prospective buyer remain unimpaired.”

Senator Tydings emphasized that the issue was intentional discrimination: “Just a year ago, in this Chamber . . . I made the observation that purposeful exclusion from residential neighborhoods, particularly on grounds of race, is the rule rather than the exception in many parts of our country.” Id. at 2528 (Feb. 7, 1968). He later noted that “the deliberate exclusion from residential neighborhoods on grounds of race—and all the problems that go with it—are still with us today.” Id. at 2530.

Members of Congress repeatedly stressed that the bill was designed to make financial ability, rather than race, the principal qualification for purchasing or renting housing. Senator Mondale noted: “We had several witnesses before our subcommittee who were Negro, who testified that they had the financial ability to buy decent housing in all-white neighborhoods, but despite repeated good faith attempts, were unable to do so.” Id. at 2277 (Feb. 6, 1968). Senator Hatfield emphasized:

The point is that where discrimination exists at all, where any man in any part of this country . . . is denied the right to buy a home within a community according to his economic ability, wherever he might please, merely because his skin is of a different color, there is a denial of a right that belongs to all Americans, and therefore this should be corrected.

Id. at 3129 (Feb. 15, 1968). Senator Scott agreed: “Most persons in this country can rent or buy the dwelling of their choice if they have the money or credit to qualify. But others, even if they have unlimited funds and impeccable credit, often are denied access to decent housing simply because of the color of their skin.” Id. at 3252 (Feb. 16, 1968). Representative McGregor stated: “How bitter it must be to find that although your bank balance is ample, your credit rating is good, your character above reproach, you may not improve your family’s housing because your skin is not white.” Id. at 9564 (Apr. 10, 1968).

The intent of the bill was summed up by Senator Mondale:

I emphasize that the basic purpose of this legislation is to permit people who have the ability to do so to buy any house offered to the public if they can afford to buy it. It would not overcome the economic problem of those who could not afford to purchase the house of their choice.

Id. at 3421 (Feb. 20, 1968). He added: “We readily admit that fair housing by itself will not move a single Negro into the suburbs—the laws of economics will determine that.” Id. at 3422. This legislative history shows that Congress’ purpose in adopting the Fair Housing Act was to prohibit intentional discrimination. The members’ statements refute any suggestion that the Act was intended to be used as a vehicle to challenge controversial housing decisions not motivated by a discriminatory purpose.

II

DISPARATE IMPACT DOCTRINE DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH EQUAL PROTECTION AND FEDERALISM

A. Disparate Impact Doctrine Encourages Racial Quotas and Alters the State-Federal Balance

This Court’s rulings have made clear that distinctions between persons based solely upon their ancestry “are by their very nature odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon the doctrine of equality.” Adarand, 515 U.S. at 214 (quoting Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81, 100 (1943)). All racial classifications by government are “inherently suspect,” id. at 223, and “presumptively invalid.” Shaw, 509 U.S. at 643-44. Accordingly, the core purpose of the Equal Protection Clause is to eliminate governmentally sanctioned racial distinctions. Croson, 488 U.S. at 495.

The decision in Ricci, 557 U.S. 557, strongly suggests that disparate impact doctrine directly conflicts with constitutional guarantees of equal protection. Subjecting government defendants to disparate impact claims leads them to engage in unconstitutional race-conscious decision making to avoid liability for such claims. In Ricci, white and Hispanic firefighters brought actions against New Haven, Connecticut, following the city's refusal to certify promotion examination results because of its disparate racial impact on minority firefighters. The City voided the examination results in order to avoid liability for disparate impact discrimination claims under Title VII. The Court condemned that action, holding that the City's race-based decision making violated Title VII. Ricci, 557 U.S. at 563. Allowing the City to take race-based actions on a "good faith belief" that its actions are necessary to avoid disparate impact claims would "amount to a de facto quota system, in which a 'focus on statistics . . . could put undue pressure on employers to adopt inappropriate prophylactic measures.'" Id. at 581-82 (quoting Watson, 487 U.S. at 992 (plurality opinion)).

Although the majority opinion did not address the tension between equal protection and disparate impact doctrine, Justice Scalia observed in his concurrence that the Court was "merely postponing the evil day" when the Court must decide "whether, or to what extent, are the disparate-impact provisions . . . consistent with the Constitution's guarantee of equal protection." Ricci, 557 U.S. at 594 (Scalia, J., concurring). Interpreting the Fair Housing Act to encompass disparate impact claims conflicts with equal protection.

A disparate impact provision “not only permits but affirmatively requires” race-conscious decision making “when a disparate-impact violation would otherwise result.” Id. “But if the Federal Government is prohibited from discriminating on the basis of race, then surely it is also prohibited from enacting laws mandating that third parties—e.g., . . . whether private, State, or municipal—discriminate on the basis of race.” Id. (citations omitted). The danger is that “disparate-impact provisions place a racial thumb on the scales, often requiring” state or municipal governments “to evaluate the racial outcomes of their policies, and to make decisions based on (because of) those racial outcomes.” Id. Where the government proposes to ensure participation of some specified percentage of a particular group merely because of its race or ethnic origin, such a preferential purpose must be rejected . . . as facially invalid. Preferring members of any one group for no reason other than race or ethnic origin is discrimination for its own sake. This the Constitution forbids.

Bakke, 438 U.S. at 307.

For instance, had the city of New Haven in Ricci altered the weights assigned to the written and oral components of its examination, it could have changed the test results so that more minorities would have received higher passing scores and promotions. In doing so, New Haven would have reduced or eliminated a racial disparate impact and escaped liability for any such claims. However, in altering the results to achieve a predetermined outcome, New Haven would have engaged in race-conscious decision making, perhaps even rigging the results to achieve racial quotas. See Kenneth L. Marcus, The War Between Disparate Impact and Equal Protection, 2008-2009 Cato Sup. Ct. Rev. 64 (2009) (describing the City's ability to determine the likely racial outcome of alternative testing protocols). Such conduct is impermissible, because this Court has never approved a government's racial classification that aids persons perceived as members of relatively victimized groups at the expense of other innocent individuals in the absence of judicial, legislative, or administrative findings of constitutional or statutory violations. Bakke, 438 U.S. at 307 (citations omitted). Without such findings of constitutional or statutory violations, it cannot be said that the government has any greater interest in helping one individual than in refraining from harming another. Id. at 308-09.

Even before Ricci, this Court expressed concern that extension of the disparate impact doctrine could lead to the adoption of unconstitutional racial quotas. In Watson, this Court noted that "preferential treatment and the use of quotas by public employers under Title VII can violate the Constitution." 487 U.S. at 993 (citation omitted) (plurality opinion). Legal rules leaving public and private employers with "little choice" but to adopt race-conscious measures would be "far from the intent of Title VII." Id. The Court warned that "[i]f quotas and preferential treatment become the only cost-effective means of avoiding expensive litigation and potentially catastrophic liability, such measures will be widely adopted." The evolution of disparate impact analysis leading to this result would be contrary to Congress' clearly expressed intent. Id.

This Court's holding in Smith, that disparate impact claims are cognizable under the ADEA, does not raise the same constitutional concerns that a similar holding would create here. To avoid liability for disparate impact claims based upon age, government defendants must engage in age-conscious decision making, which is not constitutionally suspect; rather than race-conscious decisions, which are constitutionally suspect and subject to strict scrutiny. Compare Mass. Bd. of Ret. v. Murgia, 427 U.S. 307 (1976) (age classifications are not subject to strict scrutiny) with Croson, 488 U.S. 489 (race-conscious contracting policy triggered "strict scrutiny" because it was a racial classification); and Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod v. FCC, 141 F.3d 344 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (forcing private employer to take race-conscious actions in hiring triggered strict scrutiny and was invalid); see also Ricci, 557 U.S. at 594 (Scalia, J. concurring) (encouraging Court to resolve "the war" between disparate impact doctrine and equal protection).

Even if one reasonable interpretation of the Fair Housing Act is that the Act might encompass disparate impact doctrine, the clear conflict between disparate impact and the constitutional guarantee of equal protection strongly suggests that this Court reject that interpretation. The canon of constitutional avoidance states that "when the constitutionality of a statute is assailed, if the statute be reasonably susceptible of two interpretations, by one of which it would be unconstitutional and by the other valid, it is [the Court's] plain duty to adopt that construction which will save the statute from constitutional infirmity." Skilling, 130 S. Ct. at 2940 (citations omitted). An agency's interpretation of a statute is not entitled to deference if such interpretation would raise constitutional questions. See also Miller v. Johnson, 515 U.S. 900, 923 (1995):

Although we have deferred to the [Justice] Department's interpretation in certain statutory cases . . . we have rejected agency interpretations to which we would otherwise defer where they raise serious constitutional questions When the Justice Department's interpretation of the Act compels race-based districting, it by definition raises a serious constitutional question . . . and should not receive deference.

There are a number of reasons why HUD's interpretations and disparate impact regulations are entitled to little deference. First and foremost, and as already been discussed, the meaning of the statute is clear that only actual discrimination—"disparate treatment"—is banned. Further, in the 45 years that the Fair Housing Act has been law, the Executive Branch has sometimes used the disparate-impact approach and sometimes not. For example, President Reagan explicitly rejected the approach in signing major amendments to the Act. The Department of Justice (DOJ) shares enforcement responsibility of the Fair Housing Act, with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). See 42 U.S.C. § 3613 (DOJ), 42 U.S.C. § 3610 (HUD). President Reagan's Justice Department argued that disparate impact claims are not cognizable under the Fair Housing Act in a brief to this Court. Town of Huntington, N.Y. v. Huntington Branch, NAACP, 488 U.S. 15 (1988) (per curiam) (Br. for United States, as Amicus Curiae (June 1988)).⁴ The two Bush administrations likewise avoided this approach. Roger Clegg, Disparate Impact in the Private Sector: A Theory Going Haywire, Briefly, Perspectives on Legislation, Regulation, and Litigation, Vol. 5, No. 12, 4 (Dec. 2001).⁵ What's more, the current administration's promulgation of disparate impact regulations is, to put it charitably, eyebrow-raising. It orchestrated a dubious deal with the City of St. Paul to withdraw last term's petition for writ of certiorari in Magner v. Gallagher, cert. dismissed, 132 S. Ct. 1306 (2012),⁶ and then worked on promulgating those new regulations while this Court was awaiting the Justice Department's advice on whether to grant review in this case. See Nikole Hannah-Jones, How the Supreme Court Could Scuttle Critical Fair Housing Rule, ProPublica (Feb. 8, 2013) (quoting HUD official as saying: "We were afraid we might lose disparate impact in the Supreme Court because there wasn't a regulation.""). In any event, the principle of deference is trumped in this case by the "constitutional-doubt canon," which applies doubly here, since the interpretation of the statute in the regulations raises both equal protection and federalism concerns.

⁴ Available at <http://www.justice.gov/osg/briefs/1987/sg870004.txt> (last visited on Aug. 27, 2013). DOJ's brief in Huntington argued that the statutory text and congressional intent of the Fair Housing Act requires proof of intentional discrimination. The brief also noted the substantial practical problems related to local zoning decisions that would result if the requirement for intentional discrimination were discarded in Fair Housing Act claims. Id. These concerns remain valid today.

⁵ Available at <http://www.aei.org/files/2001/12/01/Briefly-Disparate-Impact.pdf> (last visited Aug. 27, 2013).

⁶ See, e.g., Joan Biskupic, Analysis: Rights Groups Try to Avoid US High Court Setback, Reuters, (Mar. 2, 2012), available at <http://www.reuters.com/article/2012/03/02/us-usa-court-civil-rights-idUSTRE82117X20120302> (last visited Aug. 27, 2013); Editorial, Squeezed in St. Paul, Wall St. J., Feb. 12, 2012, available at <http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424052970203824904577215514125903018.html> (last visited Aug. 27, 2013).

A determination that disparate impact claims are not cognizable under the Fair Housing Act, which is clearly reasonable given the plain language of the statute and its legislative history, avoids all doubt as to the Act's constitutionality.

Likewise, federal statutes impinging upon important state interests "cannot . . . be construed without regard to the implications of our dual system of government." When the Federal Government "radically readjusts the balance of state and national authority, those charged with the duty of legislating [must be] reasonably explicit." BFP, 511 U.S. at 544 (citations omitted).

It is beyond question that an essential state interest is at issue here. So long as the exercise of the state's police power does not infringe upon rights protected by the Federal Constitution through the Fourteenth Amendment, this Court has given traditional deference to exercises of a locality's police power. This presumption of validity stems from a recognition that federal courts should be wary to tread on the spheres of authority that were never given up by state and local governments. Health and safety concerns are at the very heart of local police powers, and this Court has traditionally given deference to ordinances controlling uses of land for these reasons. See Fischer v. City of St. Louis, 194 U.S. 361, 370 (1904):

The power of the legislature to authorize its municipalities to regulate and suppress all such places . . . as, in its judgment, are likely to be injurious to the health of its inhabitants, or to disturb people living in the immediate neighborhood . . ., is so clearly within the police power as to be no longer open to question.

Extending disparate impact doctrine to the Fair Housing Act would deeply intrude on the authority of state and local governments. Doing so would inappropriately alter the federal-state balance in far-reaching ways, because the Fair Housing Act, unlike Title VII, is silent about disparate impact claims. See United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 349-50 (1971) (unless Congress conveys its purpose clearly, it will not be deemed to have altered “sensitive federal-state relationships”); see also Atascadero State Hosp. v. Scanlon, 473 U.S. 234, 242 (1985) (Congress may abrogate state authority only by making its intention unmistakably clear in the language of a statute.) Congress has not unequivocally provided for disparate impact claims in the language of the Fair Housing Act.

It would be astonishing to interpret a national civil-rights statute in a way that makes identical conduct in one city illegal while allowing exactly the same conduct in another city, just because of the different racial makeup of the two cities. And it would be offensive to interpret the same statute to mean that whether a city can enforce an ordinance in a particular way hinges on an individual victim’s skin color and the skin color of his neighbors. The application of disparate impact theory means that a city could enforce its ordinances only so long as it did so with an eye on the racial and ethnic neighborhoods that were being affected. For instance, if a city issued numerous housing code violations in one neighborhood, even if the infractions were legitimate, the city might not be able to issue more violations if too many residents of a particular race were being adversely impacted.

B. Extending Disparate Impact Doctrine to the Fair Housing Act Would Lead to Substantially Adverse Results

Not only do the statute's language and legislative history show that a violation of the Fair Housing Act requires intentional discrimination, substantial practical problems result if this requirement is discarded.⁷ For instance, if a landlord refuses to rent to people who are unemployed, and it turns out that this excludes a higher percentage of whites than renters of other races, then a white would-be renter could sue. It would not matter that the reason for the landlord's policy was race-neutral and had nothing to do with hostility toward white renters. The landlord would be liable, unless he could show some "necessity" for the policy. This, in turn, would depend on whether the landlord could convince a judge or jury that the economic reasons for preferring to rent to the gainfully employed were not only nondiscriminatory but essential. Roger Clegg, Home Improvement: The Court Should Kill an Unfair Housing Strategy With No Basis in Law, Legal Times, Vol. 25, Issue 39 (Oct. 7, 2002).⁸

⁷ For a discussion of adverse and unintended consequences of disparate impact doctrine in general, see Roger Clegg, Disparate Impact, supra.

⁸ Available at <http://judiciary.house.gov/hearings/pdf/Clegg100429>
(continued...)

Similar results could occur if a landlord required renters to have good credit.

The disparate-impact approach raises other intractable problems, like what should those subject to the Fair Housing Act do if adopting a practice has a disparate impact on one group, but adopting an alternative practice has a disparate impact another group? What should decision makers do if a practice has a disparate impact in one location but not in another? Or, if the impact ebbs and flows over time? What should landlords do if a policy (for instance, excluding felons as tenants) has an unfavorable disparate impact on potential tenants of a particular race, but is generally favorable to the other tenants who are predominately of the same race?

Section 3605 of the Fair Housing Act prohibits discrimination in the granting of home loans. 42 U.S.C. § 3605. Recognition of a disparate impact cause of action under the Act would require imprudent mortgage eligibility determinations to avoid racial disproportionalities. Requiring banks and mortgage companies to grant loans to unqualified applicants in order to avoid disparate impact liability under the Fair Housing Act would be financially unwise, and furthers no expressed intent of Congress. See Testimony of Roger Clegg Before the House Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on the Constitution, Civil Rights, and Civil Liberties (Apr. 29, 2010) (explaining how the use of disparate impact civil rights enforcement to pressure lenders is unwise).⁹ First, the pressure on banks and mortgage companies to grant loans to applicants with poor credit played a key role in triggering the mortgage crisis of 2007-2008. Hans Bader, Justice Department's Witch Hunt Against Banks Will Harm Economy, Competitive Enterprise Institute (July 11, 2011); Patric H. Hendershott & Kevin Villani, The Subprime Lending Debacle: Competitive Private Markets Are the Solution, Not the Problem, Policy Analysis No. 679, Cato Institute (June 20, 2011).

(...continued)
.pdf (Appendix) (last visited on Aug. 27, 2013).

Second, to avoid the threat of costly litigation under a theory of disparate impact discrimination, banks and mortgage companies must ease lending criteria to reduce an adverse impact on minorities.¹⁰ But these practices actually make matters worse. It is true that relaxing lending standards may reduce the relative difference in rates of securing mortgages between nonminorities and minorities. But this action increases the relative differences in mortgage rejection rates that prompted concerns about lending disparities in the first place. See James P. Scanlan, Misunderstanding of Statistics Leads to Misguided Law Enforcement Policies, Amstat News (Dec. 1, 2012) (describing how reducing the frequency of adverse outcomes (like mortgage rejection), while tending to reduce relative differences in the corresponding favorable outcomes (like mortgage approval), tends to increase relative differences in the adverse outcome).¹¹ In other words, federal regulators encourage lenders to take actions that make it more likely that the federal government will sue them for discrimination.

⁹ Available at <http://judiciary.house.gov/hearings/pdf/Clegg100429.pdf> (last visited on Aug. 27, 2013).

¹⁰ Defendants sued under a disparate impact theory do have a rebuttal opportunity to argue that the challenged action is a legitimate credit or insurance practice, for instance. But the regulatory and litigation outcomes are risky, and involve great expense. See Clegg, Disparate Impact, supra, at 9-10.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Amici Curiae Pacific Legal Foundation, Center for Equal Opportunity, Competitive Enterprise Institute, Cato Institute, Individual Rights Foundation, and Reason Foundation respectfully request that this Court find that disparate impact claims are not cognizable under the Fair Housing Act, and reverse the decision of the court below.

DATED: September, 2013.

Respectfully submitted,

MERIEM L. HUBBARD RALPH W. KASARDA* *Counsel of Record Pacific Legal Foundation 930 G Street Sacramento, California 95814 Telephone: (916) 419-7111 Facsimile: (916) 419-7747 E-mail: mlh@pacificlegal.org E-mail: rwk@pacificlegal.org	ROGER CLEGG Center for Equal Opportunity 7700 Leesburg Pike Ste. 231 Falls Church, VA 22043 HANS BADER Competitive Enterprise Inst. 1899 L St NW, Floor 12 Washington, DC 20036 ILYA SHAPIRO Cato Institute 1000 Mass. Ave. NW Washington, DC 20001
---	--

¹¹ Available at <http://magazine.amstat.org/blog/2012/12/01/misguided-law-enforcement/> (last visited Aug. 27, 2013); see also James P. Scanlan, “Disparate Impact”: Regulators Need a Lesson in Statistics, American Banker (June 5, 2012); James P. Scanlan, The Lending Industry’s Conundrum, National Law Journal (Apr. 2, 2012).

MANUEL KLAUSNER
Individual Rights Foundation
601 W. 5th Street, 8th Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071
Reason Foundation
5737 Mesmer Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90230

Counsel for Amici Curiae
Pacific Legal Foundation, Center for Equal Opportunity,
Competitive Enterprise Institute, Cato Institute,
Individual Rights Foundation, and Reason Foundation